Mr. Weatherwise's Account of Himself; in which is continued the Affecting History of a young Lady of Distinction, as related by Herself.

H E R E the adorable Stranger paus'd, and as she perceiv'd it grew late, put me in mind of my promise:-----My Uncle joined me in warmly soliciting she might defer her Journey till the Morrow, and the Ladies engag'd that they would endeavour not only to make her Stay as agreeable as her agitated Mind would admit of, but that they would then accompany her in our Coach themselves, to whatever Place she might incline to bend her Course.-----In the mean Time while Tea was getting ready, we begg'd a Continuation of her interesting Narrative:-----Our Inquisitiveness, she said, was extremely natural; so without further Sollicitation, she resumed the Thread of her Story.

-----The ensuing Evening, resumed she, I passed in Agonies too terrible for Repetition: Love had taken hold of an Heart too susceptible to that tender Passion; the Sting of public Infamy, aggravated by the incessant Reproaches of my Aunt, made me determine to quit her House with all possible Privacy and Expedition, and by casting myself upon Providence, go in Quest of the destroyer of my Peace: I therefore resolved to steal out of the House, and go as far as I could on Foot, not doubting but Chance would throw some Carriage in my Way in which I might finish my Journey.

You will easily imagine my Mind was full of melancholy Reflections, and indeed so entirely was I engrossed by them for near an Hour, that I did not perceive I was tired, till I grew so faint I was hardly able to move a Step farther: I had now got into the open Road, and it being about the Time when I might expect to see some of the Stage-Coaches from London pass that Way, I sat down under the Shade of a large Tree, at some Distance from the Road, impatiently wishing for the Sight: All this Time I had not been alarm'd with the Fear of meeting with any Insult, for I had seen no one from whom I could apprehend any such Thing; but I had scarce enjoy'd this comfortable Shelter three Minutes, when I perceived two ill looking Fellows, as I thought them, making towards me with all the Speed they were able: I started up in inconceivable Terror, looking round me, to see if if any help was near, if they should assault me, when I fortunately discover'd the Stage-Coach; and being now eased of my Fears, I resumed my Station till it was come near enough for me to speak to the Driver: The two Fellows who had given me such a terrible Alarm, stopped short upon seeing the Coach, and I really believe, I had an Escape from them:—

Calling to the Coachman to stop for a Moment, I ask'd him if he could let me have a Place: the Man, although he well knew his Vehicle was already sufficiently crouded, he did not doubt but he could find Room for me; and, jumping off his Box, begged the company to sit close, and give the young Woman a place.

"What do you mean?" said a jolly fat Woman, with a Face as red as Scarlet, "Have you not got your usual Number of Passengers? Do you think we will be stifled with heat to put Money into your Pocket?" "There is room enough for such a slender young Body as this," said the Coachman, "if you would but sit closer."

"Sit closer!" repeated the Dame, and spreading her Cloaths, "Don't you see we are crouded to Death: how dare you pretend to impose another Passenger upon us, when your Coach is already full?"

"Well," said a tall lean Woman, who sat next her, "This is the first Time I ever travelled in a Stage-Coach, and truly I am sick of it already. There is no bearing the Insults one is exposed to in these Carriages. Prithee, young Woman," pursued she, with an air of great Contempt, "Go about your Business, you see there is no Room for you--- And do you, Fellow, get on your Box, and drive on."

"Fellow me! no Fellors," said the Coachman, in a surly Tone, "I won't drive till I please. Who are you, pray, that takes so much upon you to order me?"

"Who am I, you saucy Jack-a-napes, said the Lady, a Person that——but I shall not demean myself so much as to tell you who I am: It is my Misfortune to be stuffed up in a Stage-Coach at present---- what I never have been used to, I assure you."

"Good lack-a-day! said the fat Gentlewoman, with a sneer, "A great Misfortune truly---- I would have you to know, madam, your Betters ride in Stage-Coaches. Here's a coil indeed with such would-be-gentry."

"Good Woman," said the other, with an affected calmness, "Pray don't direct your impertinent Discourse course to me, I have nothing to say to you."

"No more a good Woman than yourself," said the plump Lady, with a Face doubly inflamed with Rage; "I scorn your Words."

"Very likely;" said a grave Man, who sat on the opposite side, "But I wish it was possible to make room for the young Gentlewoman."----Ah! God bless your Honour," said the Coachman, "I thought you could not find in your Heart to let such a pretty young Woman as this walk."

"Pretty!" exclaimed the haughty Lady---- "You are a fine Judge of Beauty indeed----but I will not submit to be crouded, Fellow; so you and your pretty Passenger may ride on the Coach-Box, if you please."

"Nay since you are come to that," says the fat Gentlewoman, "I am resolved you shall not have your own way---The young Woman may be as good as you; and she shall not be obliged to ride on the Coach-Box---So open the Door Coachman," said she, shoving her Antagonist at the same Time with all her force---"Here is Room enough."

ECLIPSES, in 1766.

THERE will be four Eclipses this Year, two of the Sun, and two of the Moon.

The first Eclipse is of the Sun, on the 9th of February, beginning before Sunrise. The middle at 3 Minutes past 6 in the Morning, eclipsed 6 Digits, the End at 57 Minutes past 6. The Sun rising at 50 Minutes past six, it will scarce be seen.

The second is of the Moon, on the 24th of February; the middle of which will be here at 5 Minutes past 3 in the Afternoon, eclipsed 4 Digits, but will end before the Moon rises, therefore will not be visible here. -

The third is of the Sun, visible on the 5th of August, beginning at 25 Minutes past 11 in the Forenoon, the middle at 1 o'Clock, eclipsed 8 Digits, the End at 35 Minutes past 2 in the Afternoon, the whole Duration 3 Hours and 10 Minutes.

The 4th is of the Moon, visible on the 20th of August, beginning at 58 Minutes past one in the Morning. The middle at 28 Minutes past 2 o'Clock, eclipsed 4 Digits; the End at 58 Minutes past 2 in the Morning. Duration one Hour.

The distressed Couple.

ON his Death-bed poor Lubin lies;
His Spouse is in Despair;
With frequent Sobs, and mutual Cries,
They both express their Care.
A different Cause says Parson Sly,
The same Effect may give;
Poor Lubin fears, that he shall die;
His Wife that he may live.

The Wager.

MY Love and I for Kisses plaid;
She would keep Stakes; I was content;
But when I won she would be paid;
I angry, ask'd her, what she meant?
Nay, since, quoth she, you wrangle thus in vain,
Give me my Kisses back; take yours again.

The Fortunate SAILOR.

HONEST Sim and his Wife once to Sea took a Trip,
When a sudden cross Wind overset the light Ship;
Hand in Hand over Deck went this Couple together,
Susan sunk like a stone, Simon swam like a Feather.
Thank my Stars, says the Man (safe escap'd from the Flood)
Tis a bad Wind, indeed, that blows no-body Good.

A H Y M N to G O D.

While oft from Clime to Clime I go,
Ordain'd to travel to and fro,
To be my Guard by Land and Sea,
Who have I, who, my GOD but thee?
And let me boast this glorious Aid,
For who preserves like him that made?
What Armour shields like thy Defence?
And is their Care like Providence?

The Courtship.

A Swarm of Sparks, young, gay and bold,
Lov'd Sylvia long; but she was cold:
Interest and Pride the Nymph control'd;
So they in vain their Passion told.
At last came Dulman; he was old,
Nay he was ugly, but had Gold:
He came, and saw, and took the Hold,
While Brother Beaus their Loss condol'd;
Some say, she's wed; I say she's fold.

The Law-Suit.

TWO Parties had a Difference, and the Cause
Did come to be decided by the Laws:
The bribing Plaintiff did the Judge present
With a new Coach; t'other same Intent,
Gives him two Horses; each with like Design
To Make the Judge to his own Side incline,
The Cause being try'd, the Plaintiff's overthrown;
O Coach said he, thou art the wrong way gone!
The Judge reply'd, It cannot but be so;
For where his Horses draw, your Coach must go.

E P I G R A M.

IT blew an hard Storm, and in utmost Confusion
The Sailors all hurried to get Absolution;
Which done, and the Weight of the Sins had confess'd,
Were transferr'd, as they thought from themselves to the
To lighten the Ship and conclude their Devotion, [Priest;
They toss'd the poor Parson soule into the Ocean.

A W I S H.

Would Heaven but grant my Desire,
A small Request I wou'd require, }
A decent House and a good Fire.
A Glass of Wine to give a Friend,
And Wealth enough but to extend
My Charity to the abject Poor,
And drive Penury from my Door.
But join to this a loving Wife,
A Stranger to Conjugal Strife.

ONCE on a Time, of mortal Men
(No Matter where, no Matter when)
There liv'd a jolly, Country-Vicar,
Who lov'd the Church, but more his Liquor.
What his Name was I do not read
A BAKER, HOLLINSHEAD, or SPEED,
But thro' the the Progress of our POEM,
My name of Parson you must know him.
Some little Faults this Parson had;
But of the Dead, MUM! nothing bad;
Our Business 'tis his Faults to hide,
And only shew his better Side
All Writers in this Point agree,
That he was jovial and free;
A merry Wight; and after Mass,
Would smoke his Pipe, and Drink his Glass:

Refulgent¹ Venus, brightest in the Skies,
 And Jove her Rival in the morning rise;
 The following Table every Day declares,
 The moment when fair Lucifer appears.

Or press'd by courteous Invitation,
 To neighb'ring Farmers he'd repair,
 And spend a Winters Evening there:
 Sometimes of griezly Sprights would talk,
 That in white Sheets at Midnight walk,
 Till all the list'ning Children groan,
 And dare not go to Bed alone;
 Sometimes would on the Fiddle play,
 Or Putt, to pass the Time away;
 Sometimes to ravish'd Clowns would speak
 Mouthfuls of Latin and of Greek;
 His Logick shew, and Classic Knowledge,
 And tell of merry Freaks at College;
 Play with the Louts at Christmas-Games,
 And in their Absence——with their Dames;
 For wary Clerks learn all these Arts,
 To gain Esteem, and conquer Hearts.
 It chanc'd, as old Traditions say,
 That on a certain Holiday,
 The Squire designing to carouse,
 Some Friends invited to his House;
 Amongst the rest, as was most fitting,
 To sanctify the merry Meeting.

Howling Winds that fiercely blow,
 Ratling Hail, and driving Snow;
Naked Oaks, and blasted Plains,
 Tell that tyrant March now Reigns.

The Parson, if we credit Fame,
 Was sent for, and percisely came.

Supper now waited on the Board;
 The Guests stand round, and at the Word,
 The Parson with a solemn Face,
 Held forth his Hat, and tun'd a Grace:
 He said—and humming thrice aloud,
 Sat down, and venerably bow'd.

Plain, not luxurious, was the Feast,
 But what a generous Heart confess'd;
 First on the Dish sublimely rear'd,
 The famous British Loin appear'd,
 Whose Worth our loftiest Praise deserves,
 Great Builder of the Warrior's Nerves!
 Two Turkeys next the Footman bore,
 Which lately gobled at the Door;
 The Feast a Dish of Wild Fowl crown'd,
 Which on the Neighb'ring woody Ground
 The Squire himself had lately kill'd.
 A Sportsman most exactly skill'd;

Thus far premis'd, 'tis now high Time
 To check our long digressing Rhime,
 The Task intended to pursue,

And

The Lawn a greenish Hue begins to wear,
And swelling Buds the coming Spring declare;
But cold black Winds oft whistle in the Sky,
Thro' Seeded Fields and shaking Forest fly.

And of our Tale resume the Clue;
Wherefore the Supper now was over,
And THOMAS brought up the OCTOBER;
The hoary BOTTLE seem'd to tell,
That all within was ripe and well;
When studious to extract the CORK,
The PARSON sets his Teeth to Work;
His way and that, the CORK he ply'd
And wrenched in vain from side to side;
At length, earag'd with foul Defeat,
The LEVITE burn'd with fiercer Heat,
And grew by Thrift more valiant far,
He meditates a second War:
Firm on the spongy CORK he plac'd
His doubtful Thumb, and downward press'd
The yielding Wood;—but oh! dire Luck!
Fast in its Place his own Thumb stuck.
Loudly the pleas'd Spectators laugh'd,
With Pain and Shame the Parson chaf'd;
Long did he strive, with adverse Fate,
His captive Thumb to extricate;
Nor could his Liberty regain,
Till Hammer broke the glassy Chain;

M A Y.

The Pleasant Seasons are as kind to such,
Who little have, as well as who have much;
They Fish contented in the purling Deep,
If few they Angle, few they have to keep.

Leave to withdraw the Priest desir'd,
And bowing, sullenly retir'd.
Homewards with flying Steps he sped,
Smok'd half a Pipe, and went to Bed;
Where pondring for a while he lay,
On the Miscarriage of the Day;
At length the Shades of Sleep arise,
And gently seal his closing Eyes;
Now, thro' the gloom of pitchy Night,
There stood presented to his Sight,
Or seem'd to stand the GOD of WINE,
Known by his Tyrsus and his Vine,
Which clust'ring round his ample Head,
His broad, imputed Cheeks o'erspread;
His hand a CORK-SCRUE did contain,
And that a BOTTLE of CHAMPAIGN.
A set majestic, cross his Tun,
And said Hail! dearest, rev'rend Sex,
Thy bulky Paunch and easy Face
Proclaim thee of the toping Race;
Hold in ME thy darling God,
Whose imperial, awful Nod,

JUNE.

Thus in the cooling Brook's unruff'd Tide,
The sporting Swains their leisure Moments glide;
Discharg'd of Care, and free from anxious Pains,
They Whistle rural Joys, in rural Strains.

Immortal Deities get drunk,
And lawonly rave for mortal Punk,
Last Night (for we above, you know,
See all Things that are done below)
I saw thy conscious Shame and grief,
And come to minister Relief;

This with a Smile, kind BACCHUS spoke,
And in his Hand the Weapon took;
He flipt o'er his Finger Joint
And to the CORK apply'd the Point;
Gently he turn'd it round and round,
Till in the Midst its Spires were wound,
Then bending Earthward low betwixt
His Knees the BOTTLE firmly fixt,
And giving it a sudden Jirk,
From its close Prison wrench'd the CORK;
The Wine now issu'd at Command,
When, with a Bumper in his Hand,
Your Health, kind Parson, quoth the God:
The Parson gave a reverend Nod;
In a full Brimmer pledg'd his Guest,
And gravely toasted—to the BEST:
They chat together, drink and fill.

JULY

Now Harvest Plenty, in profusion Reigns,
And shed their Blessings o'er the distant Plains;
When Nature's Face her richest Livery Wears,
And in a thousand beauteous Forms appears.

And like two Inkle-Weavers swill,
Till both begin to hang the Lip,
See double, stare like Pigs, and clip;
Then hugging take a parting Glass
(But Dream wise all this came to pass)
His Deity reel'd home to Heav'n,
And Master PARSON wak'd at seven.

ORTHODOX ADVICE.

QUOTH John to his Teacher, Good Sir if you please,
I would beg your Advice in a difficult Case:
'Tis a weighty Concern, that may hold one for Life——
'Tis in short, the old Story of taking a Wife.
There's a Pair of young Damsels I'm proffer'd to marry,
Which of 'em to chuse puts me in a Quandary:
They're alike in Age, Family, Fortune, and Feature,
Only one has more Grace, the other Good-Nature.
"As for that (says the Teacher) Good-Nature and Love,
And Sweetness of Temper, are gifts from above,
And as coming from thence, we shall give 'em their Grace is a superior Blessing 'tis true."

Moet-Point of Matrimony

Fairly argued,

At a Tea-Table Conference, between Lady Lurewell, and Lady Loveless. Translated from the Latin of Erasmus.

Lur. G O O D Morrow, my dear Loveless.

Low. The like to you, dear Lurewell: Bless me! how you're alter'd! I protest you're a perfect Beauty!

Lur. Fie, Fie, Loveless, you should not rally your Friends.

Low. I speak my real Sentiments, I assure you.

Lur. Perhaps my new Gown becomes me. You like the Fancy then? 'Tis the newest Fashion.

Low. 'Tis extremely neat and pretty, and the Colour charms me. If I may be so free, Lurewell, who made you this noble Present?

Lur. From whom should a virtuous Wife receive her

Lov. You are happy, Lurewell! Fortune has not so mild on me. Had I bestow'd myself on any Thing but Sir John.

Lur. You don't repent, I hope, already?

Lov. How should I do otherwise, Lurewell do but survey me. Is this a Dress for a Lady? I am perfectly shamed, my Dear, to appear in Public. Every Trades-man's Daughter makes a better Figure.

Lur. The true Ornament of a Wife does not consist,
Loveless, in gaudy Dress; but in a modest Behaviour,
and the Embellishments of the Mind. The loose, Town-Ladies indeed may study every Art to attract the Admiration of Fools: But a virtuous married Woman is gay enough, if she can please her Husband.

Lov. But my ungrateful Wretch, though so very sparing at Home, is lavishing enough abroad. Drinking, Gaming, and Whoring are the Sum Total of his Account.

Lur. Hush, good Words, Loveless!

Lov. 'Tis no better, nor worse, Lurewell. And when, after a long, tedious Expectation on my Part, he meets Home between One and Two in the Morning,

While chilling Rains their lifeless Trunks surround.

drunk as a Beast, he flings himself on the Bed, and entertains me either with the Musick of his Snoring, or drowns me with a Flood of Claret; not to say more.

Lur. Hold, hold! you have been too open already, and said too much. Give me leave to tell you, you degrade yourself in exposing your Husband's Frailties.

Lov. Oh, Lurewell he is a most intolerable Bed-fellow.

Lur. And what Reception do you give him when he comes home in this Disguise? You scold, I presume.

Lov. Ay you may depend on't. He finds I have not lost my Tongue.

Lur. And is he silent at the same Time?

Lov. No, no, he swears like a Bully of Algeria.

Lur. And does this Tongue-Battle never advance to Blows?

Lov. Once the Storm grew so high, that I did expect them.

Lur. Indeed.

Lov. He brandish'd his Cape, and threatened me most violently.

Lur. Didn't you dread the Thunder.

Lov. Not I truly! I snatch'd up a Chair in my own Defence

Low. He should have found me as stout as an Amazon.

Lur. After all, Loveless, there is no Conduct in this.

Low. Don't tell me of Conduct. While he ceases to act as a Man, I shall never be perswaded to regard him as a Husband.

Lur. Ay, but remember what St. Paul says, Wives be subject to your Husbands with all Reverence. St. Peter too proposes Sarah, who call'd her Husband LORD, as a perfect Pattern of Obedience.

Low. You say right. But then the same Paul says; Husbands love your Wives. In short, Lurewell, let him play his Part as he ought, I won't be deficient in mine.

Lur. But where Things are so circumstantiated, that both can't bear the Sway, the Wife ought doubtless to submit. But tell me, did he with-hold his Hand, or

How still yon Grove: How mute the feather'd Throng;
Nor Thrush, nor Linnet now attempts his Song,
See Stephen too, beneath the drooping Spray;
Or hewing Wood, nor tunes his Soothing Lay.

did he really strike you?

Lov. No, the Coward's Fears prevented him.

Lur. But still I presume you scolded on.

Lov. I did, you may take my Word for't.

Lur. And how did he behave himself in the mean Time?

Lov. Why, sometimes he'd seem to be asleep; sometimes pass by me with a careless Air, and disregard what I had said to him. Then again he would take down his old Bass Viol, with scarce a whole String to it, and make such a hideous Noise——

Lur. At which you grew impatient.

Lov. So far that I could tear his Eyes out.

Lur. Loveless, shall I be free with you?

Lov. As free as you please.

Lur. You shall take the same Liberty with me. And this Right I think we may justly claim, from the strict Friendship which has from our Infancy been preserv'd inviolable between us.

IF the Laws, says Lord Halifax, could speak for themselves, they would complain of Lawyers in the first Place.

They whomay be said to be of God Almighty's Household, should shew, by their Lives, that he hath a well disciplined Family.

Many Diseases may be changed, or even cured, by the Passions; as Surprise, Joy, and strong Expectations; of which there are numerous Instances; yet in such Cases the ignorant Multitude give all the Credit to the Doctor, though he did no more than visit the Patient, without prescribing. This is betraying as gross Ignorance as the Country Girl, who consulted a Doctor about finding a lost Sheep; and he out of a Joke, gave her a Purge. But as the Sheep was found during the Operation, the Girl made herself sure the Medicine was the Cause, and the Doctor a Conjurer.

A fine Coat is but a Livery, when the Person who wears it discovers no higher Sense than that of a Footman.

When Riches and Favour forsake Men, we see presently he was a Fool; but Nobody could find it out in his Prosperity: For it is in vain to pretend to turn a rich Blockhead into Ridicule; the Laughters are still on his Side.

He who gets a good Husband for his Daughter hath gained a Son, and he who meets with a bad One hath sold his Daughter.

The Emperor Conrade, when he besieged Guelpho, Duke of Bavaria, would not except of any other Conditions than that the Men should be Prisoners; but that the Women might go out of the Town, without Violation of their Honour, on Foot, and with so much only as they could carry about them: Which was no sooner known, but they presently contrived to carry out upon their Shoulders their Husbands and Children, and even the Duke himself. The Emperor was so affected with the Generosity of the Action, that he treated the Duke and his People ever after with great Humanity.

He is rich enough that needs neither to flatter nor borrow, and truly, rich that is satisfied: Want lies in Desire.

A Beau dressed out, is as the Cinnamon Tree; the Bark is more worth than the Body.

OF COURTS.

LAw-terms were made to keep cross Men in Peace,
 Not for the cunning Knave to cheat at Ease.
 Long may these Pleaders prosper, if there be Any such found, that dare not take a Fee
 To beat down Truth and Reason, or devise
 To warish o'er foul Wrongs by cleanly Lies;
 And blest those Judges be who upright set,
 Promoting Justice, not their own Estate,
 But here Equivocations, Strife and Wrongs,
 Promoted by false Oaths and Hackney Tongues;
 While he that goes to Law in Anger's Fit,
 Shall find he'll lose his Money, more than Wit.
 And he that sues for Trifles, may, indeed,
 Please his base Humour, but his Purse must bleed.
